1/22/101. So close to being under 100 on expert. I almost never play expert as it will probably take a while to get there. I really concentrate on intermediate where my scores are 22(x2), 23, 24 (x3) and 25(x6). Miranda, I heard somewhere about just adding more and more mines in one board but I don't know what the "record" is. I wonder if you could put 63 mines or however many squares there are in beg. minus one and just finish the board in one second because the first click is never a mine.

Minesweeper is the fruit of the mouse. My high scores are 5-35-110. Not great, but my pride is in how many mines i can complete an expert board with. Normally expert boards have 99 mines, but i've worked my way up to 138, and am currently battling 140. Who knows the record on this, by any chance?

I am addicted to mine sweeper and am amazed at the scores posted here. I truly must be a novice, I have the beginner and intermediate level done, but the expert level is giving me a hard time. I haven't done it yet.....Any help would really wake me up to what I am missing.

I never knew that minesweeper had such a huge fan following. I am pleasantly surprised. My best times are: Beg-4;Int-27;Exp-69. I have not been able to replicate my Intermediate and Expert scores for more than a year though. My best expert times nowadays average around 90-100. I guess it needs a lot of luck to make a really good score like 69.

I can't believe there really are other addicted minesweeper lovers out there, my best are 3/26/79. I have often wondered if there were tournaments somewhere, and what the rules would be. I only play expert anymore, and score alot in the 90's, very rarely ever break it, but i hope for the day when I click that magical square and about 98 mines are lined along the outside walls. Good Luck to all.

This happens also to me once. But the times was lock to one, even if a restart a new game. I did like that 1 at int. But i was too proud of my truly 31 than i reformat the winmine.ini file to get back my 31. Maybe it is a probabilistic issue. In all the games that are played every day on minesweepers, maybe some bug happends sometimes.

My home PC has 0 (zero) seconds listed as the fastest time for expert. Of course, it was a dirty cheat... I realized halfway through the game that the clock had somehow failed to start! So when I managed to clear the entire board, the recorded time was zero seconds. :) Just thought you'd get a kick out of that...

I'm glad all of you don't live near me... :) I love this game and I'm going to have to try some of the tips I read to beat my best time on expert of 70. Is there really an official world record somewhere- like the Guinness book??? I think it would be neat if there was some kind of a global minesweeper competition.....

Yes 1 second is theoretically possible, but only theoretically! Because the probability is so low that it is impossible! Personally, my best times are 2(x5), 3(x10) on beginner, 20(x4), 21, 22(x7) on intermediate and 78, 81(x3), 82 on expert. Unfortunately I didn't break any records during these holidays but I think I can do about 1,18,70 and I will do it! I'm sure!

No, it's not possible, because of the density of mines... Beginner has the lowest mine/square ratio. It might be possible on int. but not on expert. And btw, if anyone doubts my scores (which is quite common), email me and I can prove them.

I thought I was blazing at 141 on Expert. Then again, I mark all of the mines. Apparently the record holders here don't. So, if 1 second is possible on beginner, is it also theoretically possible on intermediate and expert?

8-36-117 I'm completely retarded at the beginner game for some reason! One time I got 12 seconds on expert, but it is a fake score. Sometimes, if I'm playing Minesweeper while surfing the web and doing a bunch of things with other programs all at once, if I minimize Minesweeper in the middle of a game and then maximize it again, the computer "forgets?" to start the clock again. Has this happened to anyone else?

For those of you with access to a Unix or Linux machine: have a look at xbomb (www.gedanken.demon.co.uk/xbomb/). Apart from squares, it also features hexagons and triangles. The triangles are awesome -- imagine 12 neighbours to each field in comparison to 8 with the traditional squares.

1/28/247 Been playing for two months. Haven't played much since I got 1 in beginner and the 28 in intermediate. Other times in beg. are 2 and six 4's. Intermediate times are two 29's and five or six games in the low thirties. I could probably finish expert under 100, but there's too much guessing involved in that level. I have had boards with only about 15-20 squares left to clear with 60-something seconds on the clock. Just a matter of time before I finish expert for the second time...

I have been an addict for about eight years. Have never cracked the 130 barrier in expert. Am really impressed those who have legitimate under 60's. Just today I did do something which might entitle some bragging rights. Completed four consecutive expert games in a row without a fault, and no false starts. Times were from 143 to 191. And then the fifth game came down to 2 mines left with a 50/50 chance and I guessed wrong. Is four in a row any kind of record? Hope so, because I am sure there is absolutely no way I'll ever manage to get below the 100 barrier.

I have made comments before to the effect that I am very bad at this game. I have been reading the guestbook and find the arrogance of people who do not believe good times somewhat extraordinary and self-righteous to be honest. My best times are now 2/ninety something/three hundred and something. Whilst this is poor I am living proof that a time of 2 is possible for B. It has nothing to do with skill, admittedly - all you need is for the mines to be in isolated pockets where deduction is unnecessary, and the board will clear itself. When I scored 2 i just did a couple of random clicks and the game was over. So please, let those of us who have not yet reached levels of absolute supremacy not resort to sour grapes tactics to make ourselves feel better. You can't be the best at everything, after all. Or maybe you think you can.... In this game ALMOST anything is possible - even if you can't do it yourself.

I've played minesweeper off and on for about five years, but just this past month I got addicted again and now my best times are 5/34/107. I'm trying to develop some new strategies to get below the 100 barrier... it is hard to believe some of the sub-70 expert times, but when I think about it, if my best expert time was like 200, I'd think 107 was impossible! So I'd believe just about anything. I definitely believe the 1-second beginner times, because all you would need is a good board (ie the mines clumped in the corners, and one click in the middle finished the game). Heck, I guess with a fantastic expert board you could break 10 seconds. The odds of that board are probably too small, or else the programmers made sure it wouldn't happen. If you sweepers want to do something really annoying, try to beat a 24x30 board custom board with as many mines as you can... I stayed up way too late last night trying to beat 180 mines. Keep sweeping!

B: 4, I: 19, E: 58 I've been playing now for about two years... To my knowledge, the world record is 51, a couple of people have 55, and two or three others are below 60. I broke 60 for the first time a few days ago; I had been sitting on 60 for about two months, so getting faster is a slow process. Time for a little story... After I broke 200 for the first time, I kept a log of my best times. I improved by 1-2sec each day (on average) until I got to 99. I wasn't able to get past 99 for another two months, then I spent three months at 97. It took another two months to get out of the nineties, but then my times plummeted - I went from 89 to 79 in eight days, and two weeks later I was down to 75. This was in November '99; since then it has just been a slow and steady progression to 58. At the rate I am going, I will probably take about a year to get to 50... but that is still a fair way off. If anyone's interested, here are a few of my thoughts on how to play (and play fast). Learn the wall combinations (eg, 1-2-1, 1-2-2-1, etc.) There are LOTS of these to learn - there are also certain patterns around corners. Learning these is helped by looking at dead games - try to look for any combinations that you haven't ever seen or don't know, and see if there is only one possible combination. The wall combinations have to be memorised, and practised to the point where you no longer think about it. If you are thinking about the game you are playing, you are not playing as fast as you can. This comes from practice - I play up to four hours a day, and try to play at least one hour each day. Make sure your mouse and mousepad are clean. This is absolutely vital - clean your mouse every couple of weeks. Have music on in the background, preferably something with a reasonably fast beat. I find that my speed gets a little bit faster when I hear a faster song. When you start a game, I start from the middle of the board, and click adjacent squares (ie, don't just move the mouse randomly about the board clicking away). This saves about a second at the start. Have mouse sensitivity on lowest. (Control Panel - Mouse - Motion) PRACTICE, PRACTICE, PRACTICE! Feel free to e-mail me if you have anything to say/ask.

Couple of weeks ago I broke all my records, they're now: 3 / 29 / 93 For the sceptics, try custom 24*30 squares with 10 mines, after trying several times you'll most likely to get 1 s, so if someone get 1 s on beginner it's not a lie, it's definitely possible..... even on expert there'e still a possibility(something like all 99 mines bunched up at one of the corner), but it's close to impossible.....

I have gotten good enough to be able to win the game almost every time I sit and play. But it is hard for me to get under 100 seconds... I'm usually a few seconds over. My best time at the moment is 95, so I admire all you that play the game enough to get such good scores! I may not be fast, but I'm accurate :)

I feel that microsoft cheats ,,,,,, when I get to a either or place, where one or the other will be acceptable, I lose almost 99 percent of the time. Is this my poor recollection of the times I GUESS correctly or what. I have played long enough to know quite well when I am guessing and what the odds of the guess are too,,,,, I have some rather interesting jumps I use. Is there somewhere these might be discussed ???

Those of you that are bored with racing in minesweeper and desire a more intelligent challenge (or perhaps are suffering RSI in the wrist) use "Custom" to make the board 24*30 (maximum size) and then see how many mines you can finish with. Speed is irrelevant. Start with 140 say and increase in steps of 10. I heard someone had done 200 so I spent months trying to crack 205. Yesterday I finally did it. You have to use every trick you can think of and guess as intelligently as possible.

It is a shame to hear people disbelieving good times. My best times are 2,22,69. Of course 1 in beginner is possible - you just need luck. I'm sure sub-60 in expert has been done. Although sub-50 is hard to believe, I still think it is possible. There is a game called Tetrasquares (free on the web - use a search engine) in which the high scores are encrypted so you cannot falsely claim a high score. Can some keen programmer out there write a version of minesweeper that does this? I am not a programmer but I am a mathematician and could help a programmer with the maths side of it. Please contact me.

I have enjoyed minesweeper for several years, using the 3.1.1 and the NT versions. The 95 version sucks nigtime,, I have drawn some conclusions based on many plays and would welcome some others thoughts.... Microsoft cheats during the game !!!! I have gotten stuck often where either square could logically be a mine, and a very high percentage of guesses are incorrect. A much higher percentage than pure luck would dictate. The original minefield is random except for the first choice. The use of anything else would show patterns and be easily determined. It would appear that almost any guess beyond the initial opening moves will result in a mine/loss. This requires a listing, updated as the game progresses, of any squares that COULD be a mine. Picking one from this list will end the game, so guessing is absolutely out. However, if real minefields are encountered, guessing may result in safe passage, just not in the game of Minesweeper. Your thoughts are encouraged,,,,,thanks, mark

Checking back again with a new personal best. Only one second off this time : 65 on expert. Two days ago I had to guess the last square at 62. I guessed wrong, of course :(But, at least there's hope. Beginner is down to 3, intermediate down to 21. Maybe I'll play those some time again.... when I've broken the 1-min-barrier ;) That's all for now

I enjoy the game so much. You have to acquire a liking to the game, but once you do you are addicted. I play it constantly, and my time for the expert level is 100 seconds exactly. Our computer shut down, and I don't have that score recorded anymore, but on my other computer I have 112 seconds recorded. I haven't a clue what some of the scores are, but I'm proud of myself for my own personal scoring. I would like to thank whoever it is that made this game....because it gives me new goals, and it is something that I'm good at.

Paul's first-click strategy has some rationale- Have you noticed that the first click never hits a mine? Strange but true. If you don't believe me try a custom game with 10*10 and 81 mines. Another bit of trivia - a custom game of x*y will let you have a maximum of (x-1)*(y-1) mines.

I rarely play beginner or intermediate levels. I think my highs for those are 6 and 33. I concentrate on expert level, where my official best score is 85. I'm not sure about scores < 60, but I know it is possible to get < 80. I've been on pace to get about 77 or so recently, and with some tweaking of my technique I can see how 65 or so could happen. For anyone who thinks you must be cheating to get < 100, it just takes LOTS and LOTS of practice(and lack of a social life). Good luck, all.

Gee, guess my braggin about my 225 was all for naught huh?.... I've been thinking about the mindset that it takes to play this game, and the learning curve used to get better. I've noticed that although I recognize more patters as time goes on, my fast times are spacing out more and more. I beat it back in November when I started playing again with like a 385. Then i beat it almost the the next game in the lower 300's It was almost a month before I broke the 300 barrier, and then it was another month before I got my 225. It has been two months since I did that, and if all holds true, I should be able to beat 225 soon. Anyone think that there is some link to cognitive "g" involved. The learing curve associated with improving at Minesweeper (in my opinion) could be used as a diagnostic tool by those in the psychological disciplines... If anyone wants to discuss this, drop me a line. oh 16/99/225 (I rarely play anything except Expert)

Hi everyone... In response to Lior's question on how to install the win3.1 version of minesweeper: All you need to do is download the 3.1 version of winmine.exe and copy it into your windows directory. It should replace the one that is currently there. BTW, I just got home for the xmas holiday and was sweeping around a bit, and broke my high score by over 10 seconds! I was shocked. it didn't even feel like it was going that fast. it never does... =) So, now my scores are 5/32/87. Cheers!

Well, since the last time I signed this guestbook, I improved both my intermediate and expert times by 4 seconds. My scores are now 4/24/70. I have a screenshot available at <http://www.dsv.nl/~marcx/graphics/minesw70.gif>. For those of you who don't believe times like this (and believe me, this isn't the fastest time in the world by far!), buy a decent mouse, and keep trying. About 2 years ago, my best score was 96 and I thought I couldn't get any better, no matter what. Then I checked the internet and found out that there are guys around that get sub-60 scores. Within a week, my best time was down to 88 or something. And a couple of weeks ago, I had to guess the last square at 66... I guessed wrong. Just keep trying. People have been asking for tips. The most important thing in minesweeper is not marking mines, but clearing fields that don't have one. I know this is pretty vague, but believe me, when you develop techniques for clearing mineless squares, you will finish more games faster. That's it for now. Keep sweeping.

B-5,I-33,E-89. I've sometimes wondered if there were any other people out there with scores like mine or if I was a genetic anomaly or something. Guess I've answered that question. I shall now aim for E-75 and now that I know about screen capture, I won't have to try to burn an image of the screen into my mind every time I break a personal record. Cheers!.....

I like to play minesweeper with custom settings. Lately, I've been playing on a 24x24 grid with 155 bombs. I almost never win, but I have won three games. I don't know what my fastest time is, but I think it was 485. The key to winning is not only being able to solve the fully determined situations, but to weigh relative risks when you have to guess. Anyone play with bomb densities higher than .269?

What is it about this game that is so addictive? I play it while I'm talking on the phone, or waiting for a Website to load, or taking a break from typing something, or trying to get myself sleepy in the middle of the night, or even if I've got some problems to think over! Best times: B=6; I=28; E=108 (which I don't think I'll ever beat, but will keep trying forever!) I like the Intermediate best; I think it's the most "friendly"... Congrats on a great Webpage!

My best scores are Beginner: 7, Intermediate: 45 (did that earlier tonight), and Expert: 217 (I'm not professional like you guys but it took me at least 12 hrs of playing time to even beat expert. So I am coming along. Good luck to all.

Great Page! I too am a Minesweeper addict, and had a ~100 time in Expert mode on my Win3x machine, but I lost that score when I switched to Win95. Still trying to break that barrier, but my stupid mouse often "sticks" so I hit the square beside the one I wanted to! Really frustrating. I might just buy a new mouse so I play minesweeper with the best of you. Besides the fun aspect of the game, I think it has more to give us, such as increased logic abilities. I started playing this game when I was six or seven years old, and now I can kick anyones ass in logic-based games at school.

Ok... The cheat was something along the lines of xyzyzy[`left shift`][`enter`]... It doesnt work in Win 95/NT... However, if you hexedit winmine.exe, you will see that the string xyzyzy still exists in there. I wondering if its the same code, just that maybe it doesn't work with the GDI's... just a thought.
