They also pointed out that the second 1 sec. board on that page is not really a self-clearing board (look). That really destroys that example.....But if you look at the video that I have on that page that might not be working now, you'll see why I wrote that article in the first place. I did get three of those 1 sec boards, and the timer stopped nicely as it should do... I'm I right if I think it shouldn't have done that according to the bug you describe? Anyway, maybe this 'experiment' of mine was more designed to finally get a 1sec board on any of the possible configurations (it does not come on beg... dammit!) greetings to all

I was playing mines on another computer than the one I usually use and it was running very slowly because of memory leaks and it hadn't been restarted in about twelve years. Anyway, when I would start a game, the timer would stay at 1 for however long the game was open. That is, it was like using the doubleclick+Esc. cheat except I didnt have to anything, the timer just stopped. You can view the picture here.

Comments: OK, I changed a couple things. I swtiched the background color on the links page and took away the curved images from the ends. I also added some icons to the profiles page telling whther or not the profile has a video and/or a screenshot. What do you think? Are the images too bulky? Is the links page decent-looking? Go ahead, visit them!

Comments: Um, I prefer solid colour, just for easier reading... not that it really matters much.
